'Safe Rides' to begin

By Jim Amspacher
Daily Campus Staff

A "Safe Rides" program, designed to give people an alternative to driving drunk, will start March 26 here.

Hartford Distributors Inc. and Anheuser-Busch, Inc. gave UConn a van Friday for the program.

Instead of attempting to drive home, a person can call Safe Rides. The service is free and confidential.

According to Daniel Hughes, district manager for Anheuser-Busch, this is the first time the Safe Rides program, already operating in many towns in Connecticut, will be used at a university.

"If we just save one life with this program it will be worth everything we do," said Hughes at the ceremony as he handed the keys over to a representative of Alpha Phi Omega, the fraternity in charge of the program.

"We're not encouraging excess drinking, but we understand that there are times when people drink too much," said Hughes.

The program will be run by the service fraternity in conjunction with the UConn Division of Public Safety. Anheuser-Busch and Hartford Distributors are paying the operating expenses, including gas as well as approximately $3 million in insurance costs.

WHUS will be providing free public service announcements for Safe Rides, asking for volunteers and encouraging its use.

The idea for the program came from Ross H. Hollander, president of Hartford Distributors, Inc. Hollander said the accident last semester, in which two members of the Triangle Fraternity were killed, was part of the reason he chose UConn.

"What happened on Route 275 really inspired me," said Hollander. "I know the nature of UConn, with all the social spots off campus. They only way to get to them is to drive."

Hollander contacted Hughes who agreed the program would be worthwhile. According to Hughes, Anheuser-Busch has an umbrella program called "Operation Alert," which

Power failure darkens campus

By Dave Clark
Daily Campus Staff

A transformer exploded across from Hillel House on North Eagleville Road Saturday, plunging much of the campus into darkness for almost five hours, campus police said.

The power outage occurred at 4:23 p.m., pulling the plug on Route 195 from the campus police station to East Campus. Approximately 900 feet of wire was down, and police shut off traffic to the area for four hours, the fire department said.

A Northeast Utilities spokeswoman said power in the Jungle was shut off for a short period of time while repairs were being made.

Power was restored at 9:16 p.m., police said.

No injuries or damage was reported, though firefighters said one wire fell on a parked car.

Committee seeks metanoia speakers

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

Nobel Prize winner Linus Pauling, U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-2nd district, folk singer Mary Travers, and former Iran hostage Barry Rosen are among those who may attend a university metanoia April 22, said metanoia committee spokesman Kevin Volpe.

Metanoia is a word derived from the Greek term meaning "reflection or transformation." World peace will be the theme.

Volpe said 20 to 25 campus groups are already sponsoring activities and recruiting speakers. Hillel House, he said, has "almost definitely" secured Rosen and is trying to get Travers to speak.

Volpe said the event will begin at noon and last all day. About 30 activities "will definitely be going on," he said.

Rosen, a former U.S. State Department press attache and terrorism expert, will be speaking on "Terrorism and its Implications for World Peace." Rosen was held hostage with 51 other Americans for 444 days in Iran, following the seizure of the U.S. embassy in Teheran in November, 1979.

Travers, singer and peace advocate, is best known as Mary of "Peter, Paul, and Mary", the folk group who in the1960's performed such popular songs as "Puff the Magic Dragon" and "If I Had A Hammer".

82 believed trapped in submerged ferry

By Robert Burns
Associated Press Writer

ZEEBRUGGE, Belgium—Engineers tried Sunday to right a capsized British ferry in an effort to retrieve the bodies of 82 people believed trapped in the half-submerged vessel off the Belgian coast.

Relatives of passengers, meanwhile, went to a makeshift morgue in a basketball court to identify the 53 bodies recovered so far. Of the 543 passengers and crew, 408 survived.

The Herald of Free Enterprise fell on its port side outside this port about 15 minutes after departing Friday night for Dover, England.

On Sunday, two salvage ships carrying giant cranes moved in on the stricken vessel. The unrecovered corpses were presumed trapped under heavy debris or in sections of the boat inaccessible to divers.

Reporters flying overhead saw one crane perpendicular to the keel. Salvage crews were attaching a steel cable to the orange-and-white hull. Several tugboats stood by on a calm sea.

The operation was suspended at nightfall, after about three hours.

Officials said Sunday it was extremely unlikely anyone was still alive inside the vessel and that it was too dangerous for divers to try to retrieve bodies before the ferry was righted.

Triple slaying prompts bail reform attempts

HARTFORD (AP)—In a reversal of his position a week ago, the co-chairman of the legislature's Judiciary Committee now says he'll support reform of Connecticut's bail system.

The change of heart by Rep. Richard D. Tulisano, D-Rocky Hill, stems from the controversy over the case of a 26-year-old ex-convict who is charged with killing three people the day after he was let out of jail on reduced bond.

Tulisano, one of the legislature's most vocal civil libertarians, last week said he opposed a proposal to change the bail system to allow a judge to set a high bail on a defendant he believes is dangerous to others.

However, Tulisano agreed to support the change during a meeting Friday with House Speaker Irving J. Stolberg, D-New Haven, and state prosecutors, Stolberg said Sunday.

Tulisano walked into the meeting opposed to any reform of the bail system, Stolberg said.

"That was his stated position, clearly, when we started out," Stolberg said. "Then we arrived at a compromise we are all comfortable with."

Stolberg said he and Tulisano rejected a more radical proposal by Chief State's Attorney John J. Kelly to allow a defendant to be held without bond, a practice known as preventive detention.

Stolberg said the compromise proposal, which he supports, stands a good chance of passage.

Repeated attempts to reach Tulisano at his home and office over the weekend were unsuccessful. He told The Hartford Courant late Friday he would propose legislation to change the bail system.

During an interview earlier last week, Tulisano said any of the proposed changes in the bail system violated the constitutional principle that a person is innocent until proven guilty.

Adviser, Tower panel disagree on conclusions

WASHINGTON (AP)—An in-house adviser to Attorney General Edwin Meese, in an opinion issued shortly after disclosure of the U.S. arms sales to Iran, said the White House did not violate congressional reporting requirements and that an oral go-ahead from President Reagan was sufficient for one of the shipments.

The legal opinions by Assistant Attorney General Charles J. Cooper, which back the Reagan administration's handling of the arms sales, are sharply at odds with the conclusions reached by the Tower commission.

The legal memoranda, prepared for Meese and supplied to the Tower board, were released last week in response to a request from The Associated Press.

One legal opinion by Cooper concludes there was no violation of a requirement under the National Security Act for timely notification of Congress when the administration failed to tell key congressmen about the arms sales.

The Tower report concluded that notification appears to be a requirement. The report says Congress should have been notified shortly after Reagan's Jan. 17, 1986, written authorization for the arms sales failed to gain the expected release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

The administration never did notify Congress, and the deals with Iran didn't become public until last November, about 15 months after the shipments began.

A second opinion by Cooper concludes that it was sufficient legally for Reagan to have given oral authorization for one of the arms shipments that took place in November 1985 involving the CIA.

The Tower panel said it doubted an oral go-ahead was sufficient.

Panel to investigate Pollard spy scandal

JERUSALEM (AP)—Three Cabinet ministers on Sunday demanded an official probe into the Pollard spy scandal, which one minister said has caused "unprecedented damage" to U.S.-Israeli ties.

But the government blocked public discussion by referring the debate to a secret Cabinet committee.

"The Cabinet has no right to hide information from the government," said Communications Minister Amnon Rubinstein, one of three ministers who asked for an inquiry at the weekly Cabinet session.

Jonathan Jay Pollard, a former U.S. Navy analyst, was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for selling classified U.S. military information to Israel.

Rubinstein told reporters after the two-hour meeting: "As a member of government, I want to know, not security secrets, but about the responsibility for this totally unjustified, totally irresponsible act that caused unprecedented damage to our relations with the United States and also to American Jewry."

He said he, Energy Minister Moshe Shahal and Exer Weizman, a minister without portfolio, demanded to know who made the "terrible decision" to recruit Pollard as a spy.

Israeli leaders have said the decision came from lower echelons in the defense ministry. But Pollard alleged in a pre-sentencing document that the "highest echelons" in Israel's government were aware of his mission, and new questions arose last week after his alleged recruiter was promoted.

Cabinet Secretary Eliakim Rubinstein said the 25-member Cabinet voted to hold the debate within a 10-member forum of senior ministers who meet behind closed doors. He said no date was set for the meeting, but the committee's next regular session is scheduled for Wednesday.

State 'lemon law' has appeal

Used car buyers who have purchased a "lemon" will have a chance to speak out in favor of a bill to protect themselves and others who have been soured when purchasing used cars sold by dealers.

On Tuesday at 10 a.m. in the West Annex of the Capitol, Room 54, the General Law Committee will be holding a public hearing on the Used Car Lemon Law. ConnPirg, the Connecticut Public Interest Research Group, is asking for those affected by lemon cars to testify or write letters to their legislators.

In a study done by ConnPirg, 43 percent of used car buyers said their dealer-purchased used cars were defective; 77 percent of these cars needed repairs within the first 30 days. In the past three years, this bill has been heavily lobbied against by used car interests and has subsequently been killed in committees.

"The only way to pass this bill is to make the committee aware that there is a problem," Ed Mierzwinski, ConnPirg director said. He urges students to go to the hearing to show their suuport for the bill. "This bill is important to all consumers but especially to students," he said. Students constitute a substantial segment of the used car market because of their limited financial resources, and they are the ones who are being "ripped off as well," he said.

If you are interested in testifying or writing to your legislator or would like further information, stop by the ConnPirg office in the Student Union 290 south, or call 486-5002.

Club is trying to get Pauling, a Nobel Prize winner in chemistry for his work on Vitamin C, and the metanoia committee is asking Gejdenson to discuss "the transition of Connecticut from a nuclear to a peace-time economy," Volpe said. He added that the likelihood of getting Gejdenson to speak "doesn't look good" because of a scheduling conflict.

The metanoia committee is receiving support from UConn's faculty and administration. "The administration is behind us a 100 percent," Volpe said.

UConn President John Casteen announced the event on February 22 an named history professor Hugh Hammil and undergraduate Elizabeth Fiorillo co-chairpersons of the committee.

According to Volpe, Casteen sent a letter to professors on campus, asking for support. "So far, at least 40 professors will be talking about world peace that day, either in class or on a panel," Volpe said.

He added that the committee has sent out questionnaires to UConn faculty asking what areas of world peace they felt should be discussed. "We're trying to get people together on the subject," he said.

Volpe said professors have been "encouraged to talk about the metanoia as much as possible in class," and reactions have been "really positive."

Saying the committee is "trying to get away from a lecture format," Volpe said they would be organizing a group of panel discussions instead.

"We are putting together a really good panel for SDI [the proposed Strategic Defense Initiative, better known as "Star Wars"], with both pro and con professors debating," he said.

Films and workshops will be held at the Student Union, which has been entirely reserved for metanoia activities on April 22. One film wil be about a world peace conference held in Copenhagen, Denmark, which was attended by representatives from about140 countries, according to Volpe. "It ties in well with what we're doing," he said.

Information tables will be set up by national and international groups such as Greenpeace, Pledge of Resistance, and Amnesty International. WHUS, the campus radio station, will devote its day's programming to world peace.

Hughs said ""Operation Alert" helps fund programs such as the "Know When to Say When" campaign and alchohol awareness films for civic groups. Hughes said there are no safe rides programs currently operating under "Operation Alert."

Hollander then called Janic Gudinkas of the Department of Student Activities and asked what organizations would be best to contact about beginning Safe Rides at UConn.

"I immediately contacted APO [Alpha Phi Omega] and the Office of Public Safety," said Gudinkas.

"They were obvious choices because of APO's good reputation as a service fraternity and because Mike Pander, of the Office of Public Safety, is one of APO's advisors," she said.

Pander said the office of public safety will provide a home base for Safe Rides as well as a two-way radio for the van. They will also assist the fraternity in establishing the program's rules and guidelines.

According to Jacqui Meszaros, chairmen of the program for Alpha Phi Omega, safe rides will be operated exclusively by student volunteers.

"We have a handful now, mostly people from the fraternity who have heard about safe rides by word of mouth, but a lot more are needed," said Meszaros.

Anyone who wants information about volunteering to work for the Safe Rides program can call Meszaros at 487-8168.

Meszaros said that for now Safe Rides will only serve people traveling within the boundries of Mansfield, Willamantic, Willington, Ashford, and Coventry.

Safe Rides will be open Thursdays from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. and Saturdays and Sundays from 9:30 p.m to 2:30 a.m. The number to call for Safe Rides' service is 486-4809.

"We cannot get more bodies out of the vessel without killing somebody," said Lt. Stephen Wild, a British Royal Navy diver.

"The prime concern is to get the ship upright," said Paul Ellis, a spokesman for the ferry's owners Townsend Thoresen. "It will be a matter of weeks, rather than days."

He said diving conditions were dangerous. "It's deep, it's dark, everything is upside down and things are moving about."

Raymond Nossent, another Townsend Thoresen spokesman, said the salvage company Smit Tak of Rotterdam intended to right the vessel and tow it back into port.

Belgium and Britain have launched inquiries.

Unofficial speculation focused on the possibility that the huge bow doors through which cars and trucks are loaded onto the ferry were left open after departure. Shipping officials in Zeebrugge have said the doors which normally are above the waterline are sometimes left open to clear the area of exhaust fumes.

Storrs resident enthralls audience with tales of the afterlife, death

By Mark Mientek
Campus Correspondent

A woman who died 13 years ago and lived to tell about it spoke of her experience and of the drastic changes in her life since then before a small gathering in the lounge of Terry B Tuesday evening.

Helen Nelson, a Storrs resident, captivated her audience of about 20 students for two and a half hours as she related her tale, read their auras, told them of their past lives, and hinted at future events.

Her story began one day in 1974 when she suffered a cardiac arrest in her home, then in West Hartford. For four days and nights she was trapped in her house, unable to move, before her son discovered her. She said he had been awakened from a deep sleep 35 miles away by her psychic pleas for help. Rushed to Hartford Hospital, she was in critical condition and could barely breathe.

There she felt her very being separate from her motionless body. Her consciousness drifted up to the ceiling and looked down upon the emergency room without fear. The last earthly thing she recalls before her experience was a doctor's voice, "We're losing her."

Abruptly she whisked down a cylindrical void toward a brilliant light. Arriving in this dazzling splendor, she found it to be "beyond description, like no place on earth." A tremendous sense of love and peace overcame her, along with the realization that "we are infinite. These lives are but an instant in the reality of time." The light became a golden hue which she recognized at once as the Christ image, or universal energy. Her parents appeared, each of whom had passed away long ago and they told her that she still had much work to do. Then, although she begged to stay, she felt herself pulled back through the void.

One night she overheard two medics discussing her case. "There's no way in hell this chick can make it through the night. If she does, she'll be a vegetable," said one. Horrified at the thought, and a little indignant at being called a "chick", she resolved not to meet such a fate.

—Helen Nelson

Although Nelson had returned to this world, a battle was still to be fought. Though in a coma, she was well aware of her surroundings. She learned that she had been declared clinically dead for eight to ten minutes during which she had journeyed to the other plane of existance.

Nelson was supported by a black nurse who constantly reassured her and who seemed to impart vital energy to her. Ever since her experience, she had become aware of people's auras, the electromagnetic field or blueprint that surrounds every living thing, and she noted that this particular nurse's aura had a golden tint to it. With the help of this woman, Nelson emerged from her coma and steadily regained health. Upon later investigation, the hospital told her that no nurse on its staff fit that description, and to this day, her identity remains a mystery.

She spent her four months of recovery at the hospital in the cancer ward with half a dozen terminally ill patients. She recalls being appalled by the pervading sense of anguish and fear which surrounded her, and she vowed to spend her life explaining the beauty of the death experience if she survived her ordeal.

Fortunately she did survive, but her entire life had taken on a new perspective. Her 13 room mansion, her relationships, and many other aspects of her life now meant nothing. She was introduced to Kenneth Ring, a UConn professor studying near-death experiences, and she began to fulfill the oath she had made. She gave a series of presentations and appeared on talk shows with Phil Donahue, Merv Griffin, and Oprah Winfrey, among others. She spent long hours with cancer patients, helping them to face the prospect of death— or, as she refers to it, "catching the bus"— without fear. She also learned many intriguing talents.

One of these was the reading of auras. Nelson described several of the students' auras and how they related to their personalities. She also claimed to know what prior lives a soul had experienced. One of the students she said had been an Apache, another a gladiator, another a carver of tombstones, and still another a witch at Salem.

Another talent of Nelson's is psychic healing. One Terry resident, Dean Houldcroft, 21, asked her to 'cure' his sore neck. The group fell silent as she slowly drew her palms up and down an inch away from his skin on all sides of his body. When she was through, Houldcroft swore that his neck felt much better.

A more skeptical student, Robert Kohany, 19, asked her to determine where he was ailing. Nelson narrowed it down to the small of his back and one of his forearms. Kohany then explained that he had undergone abdominal surgery for cancer in recent months. While she was not quite accurate, she later confided that she had sensed evidence of chemotherapy but was not sure if he wanted it known.

Although she described death as a wonderful experience, saying that she was no longer afraid of dying but afraid of living, she stressed that suicide was not the answer. What a potential suicide victim feels here, she explained, he will experience in death. The only place for change is in the present.

Though nearly 60 years old, Nelson acted as vibrant and animated as someone half that age. It was easy to believe that this woman had experienced something extraordinary. The glimmer of joy in her eyes as she encouraged the young people surrounding her escaped no one.

"You create your future," she said. "Make your life have meaning, more than being a football player or a surgeon. Give it purpose!"

And Nelson herself remains a living example of her philosophy as she waits for the day when she, too, can 'catch the bus'.

A tough coat of Teflon

President Reagan must be a smarter guy than many people have given him credit for. Not only has Reagan managed to improve his popularity after weeks of trouble, but his presidency appears to be back on the course it was traveling before the Iran arms scandal rocked the administration.

A day after his speech last week in which he said the secret Iranian initiative was a "mistake," Reagan said it was time to move on to other matters. Obviously tired of the adverse publicity the matter has brought to his administration, the President appears to be making moves to get the public's attention off the entire affair.

There is no denying that Reagan is a very popular president. But there are still many questions concerning the scandal which need to be answered. Especially troubling are the questions surrounding his competency and ability to lead. The Tower commission report plainly shows a president who, at times, had little control of his subordinates.

It may be months before we know more. Until then, it appears Reagan has added another coat of the Teflon which has carried him through six years as president.

UConn keeping pace with lobbyist hiring

President Casteen announced last week that the Board of Alumni has hired a professional in Washington to represent the university's interests. John Lee, who is not a formal lobbyist, will keep the university updated on legislation and the availability of federal grant money, and promote our special projects. He has been retained on a six-month trial basis at a cost of between $15,000 and $18,000.

This initiative by Casteen – who originally brought the proposal to the Cabinet – is a good one. Last year, UConn's total research funding dropped for the first time. And, as the value of the federal research dollar shrinks and there is more competition for grants, it could continue to drop. Universities across the country are trying to get the inside track on obtaining federal funds.

In the past, UConn has tried to coordinate grant proposals from the campus with faculty applying for grants as they hear of them, often later than faculty at other institutions. This process is inefficient. With a representative in Washington, UConn will be better equipped to compete for federal funding.

Lee will alert the university to grants available from national agencies and inform us of legislation that affects the distribution of federal research dollars. Having a Washington-based representative could play an important role in maintaining UConn's competitiveness as a research institution.

Reagan's better off asleep

Your horse didn't come in?

"It's what Howard Baker said about the President. It's very depressing."

What happened? Did the President forget who Howard Baker is or mistake him for Mickey Rooney?

"Just the opposite. Baker said that his first day on the job as chief of staff, he had a long meeting with Reagan and the President is sharp as a tack."

They don't make tacks like they used to.

"Seriously. Let me read it to you. Baker said: 'I do not see a hand-off president. nor do I see an AWOL president. I see a man who is very much in touch with the issues before this country and that confront this government...And I'm telling you – it's just one day's experience, and maybe that's not enough – but today he was superb.'"

Why, that's great news. In a pinch, you never know when we might need a hands-on president who is in touch with the issues. Why would you find that depressing?

"I'll tell you why. When all this Iran business came out, I started wondering why he'd do such weird stuff. I thought that maybe he was watching too many reruns of 'Get Smart.'"

There are some parallels in the plots.

"Yeah, but then the Tower report came out and suddenly it all made sense. They said it really wasn't Reagan's fault because he just doesn't pay much attention to what's going on and didn't know what those guys in his basement were up to."

They could have been repairing the furnace for all he knew.

"Right. And then his wife's lunch buddy, George Will, comes out with a nasty column that says that Reagan's problem is that he's lazy."

That ingrate. I hope he had the decency to pay for lunch.

"But all of that was really good news. It meant that we didn't have a president who was thinking up crazy deals, selling arms, pulling switcheroos with the money to the contras, then telling us none of it ever happened, that we were just hallucinating. We had a president who was lazy and didn't know what was going on, and if somebody told him what was going on, he'd forget it anyway."

That was good news?

"Sure, because if you have a president who's lazy and doesn't pay attention to what's going on, at least he won't do something goofy, since he won't be doing much of anything."

I hadn't thought of it that way.

"Then think about it. If you look at history, who caused most of the biggest problems? I'll tell you who: guys who had to have action, hyperactive types who couldn't sit still for10 seconds without coming up with an idea for changing the world. Think of how much better it would have been if Hitler hadn't been so twitchy, and had dozed off when one of his guys came up with the idea of invading Poland. Or if he wasn't sure which direction France was."

The French would have preferred it.

"Or if General Tojo had said: 'I don't think I'm up to bombing Pearl Harbor today. How about if we send out for some sushi and watch old samurai movies?' Or if Lenin had said to Stalin: 'Joe, do you know the kind of hours we'd have to put in to make a revolution in a country this big? And even if we do it, what will we have? The same miserable Moscow winters. Hey, let's take a run down to the Riviera and work on our tans.'"

But isn't there a limit on how passive a leader should be?

"Sure. And we didn't have anything to worry about. Nancy could always tell him, 'Wave at the camera, point at somebody in the crowd, remember to smile, and stand at attention, they're playing our song.'"

Behind every man, there is a commander-in-chieftess.

"Right. But now Baker says Reagan is wide awake and is a hands-on guy. Even worse, he said it on a Monday. Nobody is supposed to be wide awake on Monday. So if he's wide awake and hands-on now, what was the problem a year ago when all the screwy things were happening that he can't remember and didn't know about anyway?"

It's possible that Baker caught him during a relapse, and that he'll soon return to normal.

"I hope so. But to be on the safe side, they ought to run down the street to a hotel and get a sign to put on his office doorknob."

What kind of sign?

" The one that says: 'Do not disturb.'"

U.S. should be only interest for senators

In his book "How Democracies Perish," Jean-Francais Revel wrote, "Democracy awakens only when the danger becomes deadly, imminent, evident. By then, either there is too little time left for it to save itself, or the price of survival has become crushingly high." I'm afraid the United States is again, refusing to see the unpleasant; like a child covering it's eyes and hoping the danger will go away if he can't see it.

If we had not waited until 1917 maybe World War I would have ended sooner and with less blood shed. If the U.S. and others would have seen Hitler for what he was and acted how many would have been saved?

Now some people in this country are refusing to see the situation in Central America for what it really is: a grave danger to our security and, in the end, to peace.

Two weeks ago I saw Connecticut's Senators Chris Dodd and Lowell Weicker on the news. They are sponsoring a bill in the U.S. Senate that would stop the $40 million in aid still to be delivered to the Contras. This $40 million is part of the $300 million in aid to other Central American nations. The third part of the Bill would stop U.S. aid to any other nation that also gives aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

The Sandinistas are an inevitable danger to peace because violent revolutionary social change is their dream for Central America. Stroble Talbott said it best in the March 24, 1986 essay in Time magazine, "Genuine live-and-let-live peaceful coexistence is as alien to a Marxist-Leninist foreign policy as power sharing is to Marxism-Leninism on the home front. The Sandinistas show no sign of being an exception to this rule."

The saddest fact is that two educated men, like our senators, are also engaging in wishful thinking when they should be engaging in statesmanship.

This bill the two senators are proposing is bad policy. First, the act of withholding the last $40 million in aid to the Contras is a breach of faith. Just because Congress is now controlled by the Democrats is a poor excuse to change our foreign policy at the last moment. What credibility will the U.S. government have if every time we have an election, the new congress runs to change our aid policies and dump our commitments. To be indecisive and not carry out our promises or to change policy with the domestic political wind is folly.

The second part of the proposal bill would give $300 million to our Central American allies. This is much needed by the nations in the area. But the logic I heard our senators use for this aid was partly flawed. The aid is to be a kind of Marshall plan for Central America and the Sandinistas are also invited to partake of this aid if they become moderates.

All this sounds fine, but it just does not take into account reality; it just shows naivete. Theories are fine in classrooms, but in the real world we have to deal with facts. History gives us some facts. A Marxist-Leninist nation never modified their behavior to take our aid. The only Communist nations that ever did take our aid did so only when in danger of survival – the U.S.S.R. from 1941-45 and Yugoslavia after its breach with Stalin. And even then they did not stop internal repression or even acknowledge the aid to their own people. The most probable reaction is the example of the Warsaw pact after World War II. They refused our aid as "imperialism."

The third part of this bill is the most incredibly foolish and ignorant. It would stop U.S. aid to any nation that also sends aid to the Contras. Since when has the United States Congress considered using financial blackmail as an aspect of our foreign policy. Obviously, since the Democrats gained control of Congress. Senators Dodd and Weicker seem to not only want to abandon the Contras midstream but also antagonize some of our allies.

Senator Weicker is one of only a few of our politicians who has spent some time with Fidel Castro. I never thought Weicker could be swayed beyond reason by a charismatic dictator. The Sandinistas called their favorite U.S. Senator, Chris Dodd, to Managua and with much publicity, gave up their prisoner to the sympathetic U.S. senator.

With all this I can't help but think there may be some undo influence somewhere. It is quite clear, I hope, that most Americans understand that Castro and the Sandinistas don't have our best interest at heart. But I still hope that our two U.S. senators do.

'Aladdin' unleashes magic on Jorgensen

Christine Noonan
Daily Campus Staff

This past Saturday, Jorgensen Auditorium was filled with students for one of the few times this semester. These students, however, were shorter than your typical UConn students.

The Prince Street Players presented the musical "Aladdin" to a crowd of delighted young children, their parents, and their teachers. It was a whimsical, funny show in which the audience could participate just by using its imagination.

The show began with the entrance on stage of a man in authentic Chinese dress — the narrator of the story. Following him onto the stage were two helpers dressed in black that the audience was told were invisible. These helpers changed the scenery by adding or taking away a few props.

The audience was asked by the narrator to imagine simple props as making up scenery. For example, a folding ladder covered in gray silk was the Great Mountain, and folding screens painted with village scenes or flowers were the streets and gardens of the Chinese city. These props were whisked on and off the stage as needed. Even the narrator changed when needed. He would play bit parts wearing a different hat for each character.

The show was performed in what the narrator called "Chinese theater style." The show was a musical interpretation of the classic story of "Aladdin and the Lamp". Aladdin's adventure begins when he accidentally stumbles behind the walls of the Emperor's palace and meets the beautiful Princess. Though Aladdin and the Princess immediately fall in love, the Princess is only allowed to marry the richest man in China.

So, Aladdin sets out to become the richest man in China in order to win his true love.

Back in the city, Aladdin meets an evil magician from Arabia who claims to be Aladdin's long lost uncle. The evil magician promises Aladdin all the riches he needs to win the Princess, but he and Aladdin must climb the Great Mountain in order to get to the jewels and gold.

For reasons known only to the evil magician, Aladdin is persuaded to enter the Enchanted Cave on top of the Mountain to get the golden lamp. Yet, the untrusting "uncle" seals Aladdin inside the cave. Locked inside the cave, Aladdin rubs the lamp and releases the Genie from inside of it. The Genie then helps Aladdin escape from the cave and they both fly back to the city.

The next morning, Aladdin is miraculously wealthy, and he ventures to the Emperor's palace with jewels, gold, and a dancing doll. Pleased with his gifts, the Emperor gives Aladdin permission to marry the Princess, and the happy couple, along with Aladdin's mother, go to live in a palace conjured up by the Genie.

Many moons go by (demonstrated by the Genie carrying four paper moons across the stage) and the evil magician reappears. He tricks Aladdin's mother into giving him the lamp, and then commands the Genie to make the palace vanish and send the two women to the Enchanted Cave.

Of course, it wouldn't be a musical without a happy ending. Aladdin enlists the help of another Genie, the first Genie's twin brother, and gets his lamp back. Everyone is saved and the evil magician is

Graduate Conference highlighted by Heaney

By Abigail Collings
Daily Campus Staff

The First Annual Graduate Student Conference was held here this weekend, featuring the internationally acclaimed Irish poet Seamus Heaney. The three-day event included a reading by Heaney, panel discussions on Irish literature, history, art and politics; a dinner party with traditional Irish music, and a book signing by Heaney at the Co-op.

Seamus Heaney was born in Northern Ireland in 1939. He received a B.A in English from Queens University, Belfast, in 1961 and went on to lecture at colleges in Belfast, Dublin, Liverpool, and California. He currently is writer-in-residence at Harvard University and lectures at the University College in Dublin for six months of the year. Heaney, a member of the Irish Academy of Letters, is also the recipient of numerous awards and honors including the Somerset Maugham Award, 1968, the Irish Academy of Letters Award, 1971, and the Smith Literary Award in 1976.

At a reception held in his honor Friday evening, Mr. Heaney said that this was the first conference of this kind he had participated in, and he was glad to see a conference in Irish Studies happen in Storrs, as events of this nature more often occur in the Boston area.

Following the reception and a dinner held at the Faculty Alumni Center, the evening concluded with a poetry reading by Heaney.

Warmly addressing the audience of about 200, Heaney joked that he didn't like answering the phone, but was glad he did when graduate students called him from UConn asking him to speak at the conference.

The First Annual Graduate Student Conference in Irish Studies was organized by graduate students Joseph Zwier and Theresa McCarthy. Academic papers were presented throughout the weekend by several UConn gradutate students (including Zwier and McCarthy), and graduate students visiting from other colleges.

Heaney began his reading with "Digging", a selection from his second book published; "Death of a Naturalist". The poem is an example of the earthy quality of Heaney's poetry, and his closeness to the Irish land and culture. Writing of his grandfather digging the turf on Toner's bog, Heaney demonstrated his wonderful ability to take a single, simple moment in time and catch it perfectly in print.

The haunting lines of "Punishment", Heaney explained, describe a young girl whose skeleton was found in a peat bog. The girl, whose body dates from the first or second century, was probably exiled from her village for sexual infidelity. Heaney likens this girl to village girls of modern times who were tarred and feathered because they had consorted with British soldiers.

A high point in the evening occurred when Heaney read "From the Republic of Conscience", a poem he wrote by a request from the Irish branch of Amnesty International; a group that works to free prisoners of conscience. Heaney said that he had originally refused the request from the group, but this poem had just "floated up", and was one "which was not a poem of didacticism at all but an entirely happy, free bubble of a thing." The poem told of Heaney's visit to the Republic of Conscience, where "you carried your own burden, and soon your symptoms of creeping privilege disappeared."

In "Spoon-Bed", Heaney describes the soul as a spoon-bed "that a child discovers beneath the sliding lid of a pencil-case, glimpsed once and imagined for a lifetime." A spoon-bed, said Heaney, is a fishing lure shaped like the bowl of a spoon.

One of the last poems Heaney read was "The Peacock's Feather", a poem he wrote for his niece's christening. Heaney told the story of how he and his wife had arrived at his sister's home in Gloucteshire, England empty-handed, having forgotten that his niece had just been christened. Heaney's wife told him to write something quicky, and he scribbled down this beautiful ode to his niece Daisy.

Seamus Heaney was at the Co-op for over an hour on Saturday, signing his books and talking to admirers, and on Saturday evening a dinner party with Irish Traditional Music was held at Cup-O-Sun.

The conference was wrapped up on Sunday with a Gaelic Mass at St. Thomas Aquinas Church.

The Players were very talented and funny. The evil magician was mean, but not mean enough to scare the children. Aladdin and the Genie were both happy and playful and appealing to the audience. The costumes were grand, made of silk and detailed embroidery. The songs were simple yet delightful. Everything was geared to the children, and the children responded with giggles and enthusiastic applause. All in all, the show was clever and a lot of fun for the kids. It even had a message. At the end of the show, the narrator told the audience the moral of the story: man may seek jewels and riches, but "finding love is greatest treasure."

Gordie's son's quite a good scorer, and Howe

By Chris Dahl
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD (AP) — Scoring is in Mark Howe's blood, so Gordie Howe wasn't astounded when his son scored his 500th NHL point and 1,000th professional point. He was just proud.

"Mark always had a great shot. He always had confidence in his abilities. He was a smart kid, a student of the game," Gordie Howe, hockey's all-time leading scorer, said Saturday.

"We always used to tell the kids, 'If there's a player you really admire, go to the game and watch him, follow what he does on the ice.' Mark followed Bobby Hull and Bobby Orr for years. He used to go into the Chicago dressing room after games and Bobby Hull would always give him one of his sticks.

"Then he would use it in one of his own games. As he was coming around the boards after scoring a goal he would raise the stick above his head and yell out, 'The Bobby Hull of the Bantams!'"

Mark Howe can be himself now. Not Bobby Hull or Bobby Orr or even Gordie Howe's son.

Now in his 14th professional hockey season, Mark Howe has long since made his mark as one of the game's premier players. He is considered perhaps the best all-around defenseman in the NHL. He had the best plus-minus ratio in the league last season.

Although slowed this season by a herniated disc in his lower back that brings constant and sometimes excruciating pain, Gordie's second son quietly scored his 500th NHL point last week. More importantly to him, he also scored his 1,000th career point.

Mark Howe spent six seasons in the World Hockey Association, scoring 504 points while playing forward on the Houston Aeros and New England Whalers along with his father and older brother, Marty.

"I consider playing with my dad and Marty in the WHA to be just as much a part of my professional career as the NHL," he said during a morning skate before a game with the Hartford Whalers. "Maybe the WHA wasn't as good as the NHL is, but it was close to it. When I got my 1,000th point it meant a lot more to me than my 500th point."

Said Gordie Howe: "There was no difference in the two leagues as far as I'm concerned. I figure the lineup we had in Houston would have put us in the top 10 at least in the NHL. I know a lot of people tried to call it a minor league, but it was far from that."

The Howes remained with the Whalers when the leagues merged after the 1978-79 season.

In August 1982, two seasons after his father retired to become a special assistant to Whalers managing general partner Howard Baldwin, the younger Howe was traded to the Philadelphia Flyers in exchange for Ken Linesman, Greg Adams and a first-round draft choice.

Mark's career points are still more than a thousand behind his father's all-time record, but personal goals were never very important to him. He'd prefer a victory or, better yet, to play for a winning team like the Flyers.

"Mark is good on and off the ice. He's the gentleman," Gordie said.

"You can be that good and also be a jerk. Thank God, Mark isn't. He's a total team player. When he won his plus-minus award last season, he figured it was a team achievement so he took the whole team out to dinner."

Mark Howe, 31, said he plans to play at least a couple more seasons with the Flyers, health permitting. He said he will only continue as long as he was still having fun and playing up to his own high standards. He would also like to play on a Stanley Cup champion.

"I've won some individual awards and made some midseason and postseason all-star teams. They're nice, but the only thing that really means anything is the Stanley Cup," he said.

...five teams to play home tourney games

From back page

Indiana was rated tops in the Midwest, with Temple second, DePaul third and Missouri Fourth.

In addition to Syracuse, four other teams will have friendly crowds for early games. DePaul, Alabama-Birmingham and Arizona will play on their home court in the first and second rounds and Indiana will play in friendly Indianapolis, where it plays an early-season tournament every year.

"We'll have to see how the games play themselves out, but because of the 3-point play and the 45-second clock we have more parity than we've ever had in the game of basketball. We think it's going to be a very competitive field."

First and second round competition will be held at eight sites beginning Thursday. Regional competition the following weekend will be held at Lousiville in the Southeast; East Rutherford, N.J., in the East regional; Cincinnati in the Midwest; and Seattle in the West.

The four regional winners will gather at the Superdome in New Orleans at the end of March for the first $1 million final four. A record payout of almost $25 million is projected.

In the semifinals the East will play the Southeast and the West will take on the Midwest.

Women swimmers end season

McDevitt pleased with Huskies' ECAC finish

The women's swim team ended its season Saturday, by finishing "a tremendous fourth place" at the Eastern College Athletic Conference swimming and diving championships at Springfield College.

Boston College took first place with 931 points, followed by Colgate with 488, Northeastern with 477.5, and UConn with 401.

According to UConn coach Peter McDevitt, the Huskies' performance was outstanding considering the conditions they were working under.

UConn only brought twelve swimmers and one diver to Springfield. But the whole team was not on hand to compete everyday because some of them were attending classes on Thursday and Friday.

" Thursday we had six to eight girls, Friday we had four, and then we had four on Saturday," McDevitt said.

"We were still going to school while we were competing in the meet," McDevitt said.

The Huskies' fourth-place finish is even more impressive when you consider that the three teams that finished ahead of them are all scholarship subsidized. UConn doesn't provide swimming scholarships.

Senior Dana Redman and Junior Suzy Lyons had outstanding meets for the Huskies, highlighted by the 100-yard individual medley where they finished first and second respectively.

Redman had several other good finishes, including first place in the 50-yard butterfly, where she set a school record, and third place in the 200-yard breastroke.

Sophmore Barbara Pizzoferrato had a career best time in the 500-yard freestyle where she finished 10th. Pizzoferrato and Carla Nieforth finished ninth and seventh respectively in the 1650-yard freestyle.

"The 1650 is the longest event and nobody likes to swim it," McDevitt said, "except for Carla and Barbara, they love it."

UConn's lone diver, freshman Janet Panico also had a good meet, as she came back from a failed dive in the 1-meter competition to place fifth in the 3-meter.

"Janet's going to be a really great diver," McDevitt said.

"It was really nice to end the season this way," McDevitt said.

Boston College 931, Colgate 488, Northeastern 477.5, UConn 405, Fordham 357.

Track seasons wrap up

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The men's indoor track team concluded its winter season Sunday with selected individuals turning in strong performances at the IC4A Championship held at Harvard.

Senior captain Mike Christie placed third in the triple jump with a leap of 49' 10", while freshman Mark Alleyne also took third in his event, the long jump, with a 23' 9 1/4" effort.

Sophomore Rohan Freeman set the school record in the 400-meter dash, taking sixth in a time of 47.70 second.

In women's track action, senior co-captain Mary Kennen finished tied for second in the high jump at the East Coast Athletic Conference Championship held this weekend at Yale University. Kennen's leap was 5' 8 3/4", earning her a tie with three other competitors.

NCAA tourney field set

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Indiana, North Carolina, Georgetown and top-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas were made the top four seeds in a 64-team NCAA tournament that gave four teams home-court advantages in the first round and excluded the last two national champions.

But the expected stacking of the West against UNLV didn't materialize. The Runnin' Rebels were seeded first in that region followed by No. 6 Iowa, No. 11 Pitt and No. 18 UCLA.

The selection committee, which bases its picks as much on strength of schedule as overall record, picked six teams from each of three conferences — the Big Ten, Southeastern and Atlantic Coast, from which 16-12 Georgia Tech was included. The Big East contributed five teams, but 15-15 Villanova, the 1985 national champion was not among them.

Nor did the field include defending national champion Louisville, which finished 18-14 and lost the Metro Conference tournament final Sunday to Memphis State, which is on probation. That left the Metro without a representative in the championship tournament.

Memphis State was one of 18 teams with more than 20 wins excluded from the field. Among the others were 25-game winners New Mexico and Howard, and 24-game winners St. Louis and Cleveland State, the latter one of the surprises of last year's tournament.

North Carolina was seeded first in the East, despite losing its conference tournament to North Carolina State. Syracuse, which lost the Big East final to Gerogetown, was seeded second and will play its first-round game at home at the Carrier Dome; Purdue was seeded third and TCU fourth.

Villanova to play in NIT

NEW YORK (AP) — Villanova, college basketball's national champion in 1985, leads the field for the 50th edition of the National Invitation Tournament, it was announced Sunday.

The Wildcats, 15-15 overall and eliminted in the quarterfinals of the Big East Conference tournament, were among the 30 teams named to the field. The final two teams, as well as the sites for two of the games, will be named Monday.

Thirteen teams that won 20 or more games were selected. Missing from that list was Louisville, the defending national champion, which was passed over by the NCAA for its field of 64 earlier Sunday.
